SIUC receives grant for carbon-capture research

Nick Johnson
DAILY EGYPTIAN
NICKJ39@SIU.EDU

The U.S. Department of Energy has granted SIUC $300,000 to investigate a possible solution to carbon dioxide emissions from coal power plants, said Jay Means, dean of the College of Sciences.

Means and physics professor Vivak Malhotra are collaborating on a carbon-capture project designed to test the effects of carbon sequestration, or capture. In a carbon-capture system, power plants pump emitted carbon dioxide gas into underground formations such as coal seams or aquifers instead of into the air.

The grant money would cover the costs of equipment and preliminary experiments, which could determine if seismic activity would release stored carbon dioxide and other contaminants into the air, Means said.

A stainless steel, temperature-controlled chamber will be used to subject carbon dioxide stored in rock samples to seismic activity, Means said.

John Mead, director of the Coal Research Center, said research on technologies that manage emissions is important because better use can be made of the large reserve of coal in the area.

"We depend on coal for about half of our electricity today," Mead said. "It's a pretty big part of the energy mix in this country."

Mead said processes such as carbon capture would allow the use of coal resources while other energy sources are developed.

"There's going to be a transitional period which could be decades long," Mead said. "Technologies that can use processes such as ... carbon capture could give us much cleaner systems than we're using today."

Brent Ritzel, director of public education for Equitech, a partnership of companies dedicated to developing sustainable energy, said carbon capture needs to be researched. While carbon-capture systems should be researched, he said he would also like to see the Department of Energy invest more money in sustainable energy.

"My big problem with this concept is that it's not sustainable; the planet would be just one big seltzer bottle," Ritzel said.

Carbon-capture systems are limited by the amount of underground storage space and the amount of energy it can provide, Ritzel said.

"Even if we burn through all the coal on the planet, it would still only take us (through) another 100 to 200 years," he said. "Anybody who looks at this rationally has to see there's limitations to it. And if there's limitations to it, it's not sustainable."

SIUC was recently granted $300,000 as part of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act to research carbon capture and sequestration technology. Carbon, one of the coal plant's bi-products, can be recycled with new carbon capture technology, said Bob Beckman, assistant chief plant operating engineer.

Stadium remains nameless

Stile T. Smith
DAILY EGYPTIAN
STS34@SIU.EDU

If a large enough donation is not made before the 2010 season, the SIU football team could play in "Saluki Stadium."

Rickey McCurry, vice chancellor for institutional advancement, said in order for a candidate to be considered for naming rights, a person or business would have to donate a large portion of the construction costs.

"If there is a mixture of public dollars and private dollars in the building of a facility, then the requirement is 33 percent of the cost," McCurry said. "Certainly, the Board of Trustees is not bound by that policy."

Athletic Director Mario Moccia said if a donation large enough to name the stadium was not submitted, the stadium would likely be given a generic name.

"I think the football stadium being named Saluki Stadium, much like a lot of schools around the country, would serve as a terrific name if we don't get a major donor or corporation who would name it for themselves," Moccia said.

Gary Kolb, chairman of the Naming Universities Facilities Committee, said the process of naming the stadium would begin with McCurry. McCurry would look over the naming request and determine if it met the guidelines.

Student magazine starts makeover

Staff members look for more student participation

Grassroots is growing around campus.

The student-run literary magazine, Grassroots, is taking steps to include all students in fine arts in its publication, said Pinckney Benedict, Grassroots faculty adviser.

Benedict said the magazine is looking to gain more student involvement through hosting campus events and expanding the types of submissions accepted into the annual spring publication.

Staff members will host the magazine's first open-mic party at 7 p.m. today in the Faner Hall courtyard. Benedict said everyone who has penned poetry, prose or plays could attend the event and perform.

"This night will be a great chance for aspiring artists to display their work and meet other students with similar interests," said Amy McKenzie, Grassroots editor-in-chief. "If you enjoy writing, you will enjoy hearing it, too."

The publication, which only accepts undergraduate submissions, will also change its appearance before its spring 2010 release, said co-editor Sam Holley, a senior from Peoria studying English. Holley said a layout adjustment in the magazine would make it easier to feature full-page pictures drawn by students, which are not traditionally published.

McKenzie, a senior from Marion studying English and creative writing, said submissions, which are due by Oct. 31, have been expanded to include original comics and sheet music, both of which are under-represented art forms. The Grassroots Web site will include audio clips of chosen music submissions, she said.

The Grassroots staff has not yet chosen a theme, but Holley said he encourages all students to enter their best work. Co-editor Mary Meadows said only a few submissions have been received, but she hopes fliers in various campus locations will attract more people to contribute.

"It is a good opportunity for just undergraduates to publish work for the first time," said Meadows, a junior from Anna studying literature. "Students can also gain confidence in their writing by seeing others respond to it."

University creates spiritual service

Genna Ord
DAILY EGYPTIAN
GORD@SIU.EDU

For almost a quarter century, one man has sought to serve thousands.

The Rev. Bob Gray, pastor at Our Savior Lutheran Church and chaplain to the SIUC and Carbondale Police Department, said he has served in the area for 24 years. Beginning this fall, his job of ministering to the needs of people at the university and in the community might get a little easier.

Gray said for the first time he can remember, a volunteer board has been set up to help attend an area of students' needs that is sometimes overlooked: the spiritual.

Peter Gitau, dean of Student Affairs, said the establishment of an SIUC Chaplaincy Board of Volunteers is another step in the direction of supporting the new Saluki Cares program, which provides confidential guidance to students, faculty and community members. He said it is an attempt to be more responsive to what students need.

"One thing you cannot deny: The students who come to an institution like this do not leave their religious beliefs at home," he said.

Gitau said he had the idea for the board when he saw Gray trying to meet the needs of his own congregation as well as roughly 22,000 students. Gitau said the university has a diverse student population, and not all of them would likely gravitate to one man.

To address this, the board, which is purely voluntary, will consist of around eight individuals, each representing a different community of believers, allowing students to meet with a religious leader of their own faith, Gitau said.

He said the group includes people from the Protestant, Islamic and Jewish communities, as well as others. The individuals volunteering were asked to participate because they are leaders in their particular religions, he said.

Gitau said the Chaplaincy board will be available to the Counseling Center and could be involved in planning commemorative events such as memorials to help students grieve and work through their feelings in a time of tragedy. Because of the diverse nature of the board, it can also be an intellectual forum for students who wish to learn about other religions.

Gray said another way the board can help students is to answer any questions they may have regarding information they hear in classes that disagrees with what they have learned from their religion, such as evolution against creationism. Concerns or questions about morals or values can also be addressed, he said.

Because the board has only met once, Gitau said any questions could be addressed to him. Eventually, he said, it could be reached through the Saluki Cares program.

For students who are not interested in the service, Gray said, they do not have to be involved.

"The purpose is not to cram religion down people's throats," he said.

Not all the board's uses deal with faith, Gitau said. It can also connect students with congregations or groups that can help them in times of need, such as providing food, clothing or shelter when it is necessary, he said.

"I don't want people to think of this board as just providing 'spiritual stuff,'" Gitau said. "The religious communities can provide a lot of tangible benefits to students who are in need."

Fatimah Ali-Ferré, a first-year doctoral student from Nigeria in health education, said the service sounded logical and plausible. She said having the board might be a way for students to feel more connected to a group they might not be as close to since living on campus.

Ali-Ferré said she is active with her Muslim community, but might use the board if a situation arose where she might need it.

Gray said he thinks interest in the service depends in part on whether faculty, staff and others who deal with students direct them to the board.

"I think SIU is trying to become more caring about students, and there's a lot of aspects of that that are starting to take place," he said.

Curfew-trapped Hondurans seek food amid crisis

Mark Stevenson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Hungry Hondurans scrambled through looted stores and lined up for food on Wednesday during a break in a long curfew called to halt violence that erupted with the return of the country's deposed leftist president.

Troops and police ringed the Brazilian Embassy where ousted President Manuel Zelaya took shelter on Monday after returning home in a daring challenge to the interim government that threw him out of the country at gunpoint in June and that vows to arrest him if he leaves the shelter of the diplomatic mission.

Most other Hondurans were trapped as well, cooped up in their homes since Monday evening by a government order to stay off the streets — an order ignored by some looters and pro-Zelaya protesters.

Schools, businesses, airports and border crossings closed, though the coup-installed government lifted the nationwide curfew for six hours Wednesday so that businesses could open briefly and people could buy what they needed.

Brazilian President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva used the podium at the U.N. General Assembly in New York to demand Zelaya be reinstated as Honduras' president and the U.S. State Department in Washington called for restraint by both sides.

State Department spokesman Ian Kelly said the U.S., which still has contact with Honduran officials, had helped persuade authorities to restore water and power service they had cut at the Brazilian Embassy where Zelaya is holed up and had helped evacuate some Brazilian Embassy staff.

But on a street in Tegucigalpa, Lila Armendia peered out through her wooden gate at a scene of burning trash bins placed by protesters.

"It's scary to go out," she said. Being stuck inside her home is no good either. "It's like being in jail," said the 38-year-old seamstress who has been unable to work. People determined to stock up for the uncertain days ahead trudged past bandana-masked youths sitting on boulders they had used to block roads.

shelves hunted through shards of glass and smashed potato chip packages for undamaged food.

Thousands of Zelaya supporters marched in the direction of the Brazilian Embassy but were blocked by soldiers and riot police who used tear gas to disperse them after the protesters threw rocks and sticks.

Police said they arrested 113 people after scores of business were looted as protesters skirmished with officers throughout Tuesday night.

Zelaya told the Argentine cable channel Todo Noticias that 10 of his supporters had been killed, though he gave no details. Authorities said there were no deaths at all, though they said one person suffered a gunshot wound.

Dr. Mario Sanchez at the Escuela Hospital in Tegucigalpa said three people were treated for gunshot wounds there, however.

Whoever is sorry now better speak up

MICHAEL SPRINGSTON
leftypen@egyptian.net

Kanye West needs to apologize to Joe Wilson for Serena Williams’ threat to Jimmy Carter’s remark on racism.

Why can’t we all just get along? Hey! Why should I let some piñata-headed traffic offender tell me how to behave?

#$^%& YOU! Sorry about that, chief. I meant to say *&%#! YOU!

I do want to apologize to Rush Limbaugh for that column where I called him Rush Fuehrer. That was a spell check error. I meant to call him the Rushfuehrer. Sorry.

What did Glenn Beck say that time he cried like a little girl on his television show?

“I pooped my pants and it’s Obama’s fault ... BWAAH ... BWAAH!”

OK, Glenn Beck never said that. I’m sorry Glenn. Me bad. Mea culpa.

I think it’s a funny line, but I am sorry that I think it’s funny. Forgive me, Oprah, for I have sinned. For my penance I’ll do five Larry Kings and five Jay Lenos. Jay Leno? What’s he doing taking Kanye West’s confession? Are the ladies from ‘The View’ on vacation?

Did I say I was sorry for this column? Not as sorry as I’m going to be in a few more paragraphs.

I’m sorry I lied to Sister Leona about what happened to my math homework.

I’m sorry about throwing up on that couch during that party in high school.

Please do accept my sincerest apology as soon as I work up a modicum of sincerity.

America is turning into one sorry nation. Sorry if that sounded unpatriotic. Sorry if that last apology wimped out on the previous statement.

Maybe Congress never should have apologized for slavery 400 years too late. Now everyone expects one.

Did I already apologize to Rush Limbaugh? I’m going to owe him another one. He’s an idiot. Sorry, Rush.

double entendres are funny.

I’m sorry I can’t think of anything else to say about Rush Limbaugh that would require an apology.

I am sorry about the time I went to a White Sox–Cardinals game on my wedding anniversary.

I’m sorry about never being able to learn to speak Spanish, but I’m not sorry I’ve never seen a single episode of ‘The Brady Bunch’.

I’m sorry if that sounded elitist. I’m sorry if I’m an elitist. I’m sorry if I’m not an elitist.

I’m sorry for all the jokes I ever made at the expense of Cubs fans. Because I’m not a fan, the Cubs do not owe me any kind of apology for their last century of baseball. There are times when apologies are not necessary.

I would apologize for cutting off that texter driving 15 mph down Route 13 Tuesday, but I actually meant that one.

THE SANITY CORNER

Cold War rehash

rchthom88@gmail.com

The Cold War was a wonderful time of air sirens, canned food and post-apocalyptic sci-fi. Who could want any more then the overhanging threat of a nuclear bomb on the shore of our beautiful land? The beauty of it is this era has not left us. Only the name it goes under.

Terrorism, instead of communism, is now the name of villainy we hear so often.

The overhanging threat of violence against our nation, terrorism has become a rash across the globe with suicide bombings and the loss of countless lives.

Conflicts between radical individuals against larger society are prevalent. It is a different name for something that is quite similar to what was started in the Cold War.

The commonality is the underlying hate that cannot be denied. What will we do in the situation we face?

One answer, which has been used in the past eight years, is to use full-out force. Fight with cruel tactics. These tactics do not benefit anyone. It only provokes more anger and hate. Whoever is in charge of the airstrikes from the U.N. should not expect a positive response from the Afghani people.

You can’t blow up someone’s town or village and expect them to love you. This is the lesson learned from the Vietnam War.

Aggressive and preemptive tactics did not end well for America. The U.N. air strikes a few weeks ago show we are not the only country to use force against terrorism.

These tactics totally miss the point of what makes our enemy strong. Only individuals, not an entire army, cause damage.

Now we are at the heart of the problem in Afghanistan. Osama Bin Laden said we are fighting a futile war in his last address to America. This does not seem likely.

The fact he said that tells us we are going in the right direction. We need to be sure to have the right tactics in fighting terrorism in this Middle Eastern country. We need James Bond-like tactics to get the bad guy; police and spy work to get to the heart of this new threat.

An independent investigator would be able to find evidence and find the people who are in al-Qaeda without using all the bulky units in an army reserve. We have made enemies of individuals making individual decisions.

To have traditional units available are still useful. If a bunch of terrorists are sitting in a room full of bombs, then it would be great to call up a unit.

Terrorist activity has been spread through other parts of the world. New terrorist activities are starting to spring up in depressed areas such as Somalia.

There is no way of knowing how far this threat will go, or where this conflict will take America and other countries in the world. The only thing we can do to face this extremist threat is to respond in a reasonable manner with a force that can address individual threats.

biggest highlights.

Each group, from Elsinore to Zach May and The Maps to Santa (my apologies bred familiarity from the start, even for an out-of-towner.

After two-and-half days of guitar onslaught, Saturday night's main focus of electronic music was a worthy respite. It is just too bad when headliner RJD2 took the stage to close out the festival, all I could think of was crashing on that lumpy loveseat. Not even old-friend caffeine had what it took to help me make it through the last turntable scratch, but that caffeine dependency is neither here nor there.

The weekend was all about fulfilling my live music dependency.

Pygmalion 2009 definitely scratched that particular itch, poor sleeping and eating habits included.

Today's Birthday — Finish up a lot of old projects this year, or simply decide not to do them. (That is one of your options, remember.) Start with a list of old stuff.

To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.

Aries (March 21-April 19) — Today is an 8 — Hide out until the dust settles. There's a big mess at work, but someone figures out the problem.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) — Today is a 7 — Not a good day to gamble. Don't even shop. Odds are too great you'll get the wrong color or size or something.

Gemini (May 21-June 21) — Today is a 7 — You're in the midst of the confusion. It's easy to see why you'd want to get out, but it won't happen for a few days.

Cancer (June 22-July 22) — Today is a 7 — There will be mistakes. You're in the learning phase. If you knew how to do this, you wouldn't be learning, would you?

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) — Today is an 8 — The better educated you are, the more interesting people you attract. This is a true win-win situation.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Today is a 6 — You're stirring things up to get them just right. Take responsibility for the mess you're making.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Today is a 7 — Take everything you hear with a grain of salt. Spiritual matters may take a giant step forward now.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Today is an 8 — This is a good day for you, so make the most of it. Your one-track mind takes you in many directions. Enjoy!

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Today is an 8 — Today is your day! Make the most of every opportunity. Eat imported chocolate, if possible.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Today is a 5 — Stick to the game plan, even if others are on vacation emotionally. Compassion is your best tool.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Today is a 7 — Use the ideas that have been rolling around in the back of your mind. Pull them out of a hat like a magician.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) — Today is a 9 — When you're on, you're on. Take advantage of today's opportunities. They will serve you into the future.

North Dakota State head coach Craig Bohl said North Dakota State is primed to pull off an upset.

The Bison (1-2) will open the Missouri Valley Football Conference portion of their season at 6 p.m. Saturday against the Salukis in McAndrew Stadium. Bohl said it would be a challenge for his team.

"They play really well in Carbondale. I know this is a big challenge," Bohl said. "But you look at progress in the conference, and somebody always knocks off the top guys. We're going to put ourselves in the position to win."

The Bison have struggled this season and look to build off their success after last Saturday's 59-28 win against Wagner College. The win prevented North Dakota State from starting the season 0-3 for the first time since 1962.

The Bison entered the week giving up more points (36.7 per game) and more total yards (446.3 per game) than any other team in the MVFC.

But Bohl said the defense is better than what it has shown.

"I think we have a good defense," Bohl said. "We haven't shown all of that yet, but I think we have a good defense."

Bohl said the return of linebacker Matt Kittelson should help with the Bison's defensive woes.

The defense might not need to perform if the Bison offense continues its blistering pace.

The Bison have lit up scoreboards with their west-coast, option-oriented offense. Quarterback Nick Mertens said he enjoys the freedom the option gives him in running the offense.

"I'm enjoying myself this year," Mertens said. "If I can find a gap and get my shoulders square, it's going to be tough to stop (the option) for less than a yard or two."

Running back Pat Paschall has posted big numbers because of the option with 489 rushing yards and four this season. The

"We just have to focus on tackling him and limiting the yards,"

SIU head coach Dale Lennon said.

"If we don't wrap him up and bring him down, he's going to make big plays on us."

Though the Bison have struggled, Bohl said he is confident his team can turn its season around.

"We matched up well against Southern last year," Bohl said.

"We've got a good plan, a healthy team; we're going down to Carbondale to compete."

A Russian owner in NBA: Tycoon buying NJ Nets

Tom Canavan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Could the New Jersey Nets become the Nyets?

The basketball team once known as the New Jersey Americans is a step closer to being owned by Russia's richest man, Mikhail Prokhorov, who on Wednesday said he has a deal to buy 80 percent of the NBA team and nearly half of a project to build a new arena in Brooklyn.

The proposed blockbuster deal would give the Nets' current principal owner, Bruce Ratner, the needed cash to move forward with the centerpiece of his Atlantic Yards development, which includes plans for retail and residential projects.

It would make Prokhorov, a Russian billionaire and former amateur basketball player, the NBA's first non-North American owner.

It would mean the Nets really do seem headed to Brooklyn, a New York City borough without a major pro sports franchise since baseball's Dodgers decamped for Los Angeles in 1957.

And it would be a sign the NBA is serious about building a worldwide identity. Commissioner David Stern immediately praised the deal, saying it will help the NBA expand its reach and would ensure that the Nets, who play in the aging Izod Center in East Rutherford, will have a state-of-the-art arena.

"Interest in basketball and the NBA is growing rapidly on a global basis, and we are especially encouraged by Mr. Prokhorov's commitment to the Nets and the opportunity it presents to continue the growth of basketball in Russia," Stern said in a statement.

Dallas Mavericks owner Mark Cuban, too, is ready to welcome Prokhorov to the NBA.

"I love it. I think he will bring fresh ideas and viewpoints, and hopefully this will be the start of a trend towards international investors," Cuban said in an e-mail. "Plus, I took Russian in high school, so it will give me a chance to refresh."

Stern has long touted the NBA's international reach, proudly boasting that two-thirds of the players on the medals podium at the Beijing Olympics were NBA players. The league plays preseason games in Europe and China, and its All-Star and NBA finals games have been televised in hundreds of countries.

In going global, Stern could be welcoming quite a globetrotter.

Prokhorov, who is 6-foot-6 and was an avid basketball player in his school days, is a fixture in glitzy European resorts and once was held in France for four days of questioning — but never charged — in a prostitution investigation. Even in Russia, he raises eyebrows for his penchant for private jets and a gorgeous entourage. A 2007 TV commercial for a Russian juice company lampooned him, although it did not name him.

He has to go down as one of the greatest managers of all-time. To me, Cox will always be remembered for his outbursts on the umpires. I can only hope that he goes out with one last ejection, hopefully capped off with him ripping off a base and throwing it, and his hat, into the crowd as souvenirs.

There is no question about it, Cox is one of the best in the game. He was head of a legendary run that saw the Braves win 14-straight division titles. Cox managed John Smoltz, Tom Glavine and the greatest pitcher of this generation Greg Maddux. He is the man. Cox is second only in my heart to C. Montgomery Burns. Did you know Burns told Darryl Strawberry to hit a home run and he did? Burns endured eight all-star players falling to various maladies (including Ken Griffey Jr. succumbing to gigantism) to win a high-stake game against their rivals.

Bobby Cox is without a doubt up there with the best managers ever. He will be the face of the Atlanta Braves organization probably forever. He turned the Braves organization around in 1991, and his presence kept Atlanta on top throughout the '90s.
